

What is the moon?

The moon is a well of water , coated in a layer of pure, wan ice, sitting in a field of dark lush grass.

It is a miniscule spot of ashen milk that is floating on the translucent surface of a bowl of smooth, ripple less water.

The moon is a phosphorescence that is bright and luminous at the end of a dark tunnel.

It is a light, airy bubble floating against a charcoal black chimney pot.

The moon is fresh cream, in a midnight blue porcelain jug.

Michael Edwards

